THE ALL NEW ROGER RAMJET

Hero of our Nation

A 26 x 11-minute animated sit-com from Cuppa Coffee Studios

2011 -- Roger Ramjet is back and through the marvels of space travel, he hasn't changed a bit -- but the world has! The Internet, GPS, Botox, celebrity sex tapes, same-sex marriage, five dollar coffees?! The Russians are now our friends and Roger's beloved proton pills are on the FDA's banned substance list. So what's a guy to do after going from hero to zero almost overnight?

Roger settled, or rather, settled down with long lost soul-mate, Lotta Love (now 68, but still smoking-hot thanks to cosmetic surgery), and the twins (two freeloading adult sons that she claims are Roger's despite the fact that one of them is black). To support his family, Roger is the caretaker of Millard Fillmore High, where he is disrespected by the children, except for the few social rejects he's recruited to reform the American Eagle Squadron - code -nicking them Yank, Doodle, Dan and Dee.

When he's not doting on his geriatric wife and playing father to his idiot sons, Roger spends his free time thwarting un-American activities around the neighbourhood with the aid of his American Eagles -- all the while avoiding the ire of the school principle, who doesn't take kindly to caretakers sneaking off with school children on "top-secret missions".

Is Roger Ramjet a jingoistic and slightly xenophobic hero to the post-911 Conservative crowd? Well, yes, but it's the "American Eagle Squadron" who are the real heroes, and Roger is the lovable-but-dim super hero wrapped in the Stars and Stripes, blinded by his own stupidity but redeemed by good-intentions. Combining straight-faced patriotism with an edgy take on the modern family, the Ramjets is slyly subversive and seriously silly -- a frenetically paced and pop-culture-laced classic.
